Hydrophobia

With the coming dog days there returns that fear of hydrophobia which is in abayato: duing the winter months; yet, if we may trust scientists, it is a felse security, as dogs are liable to become affected with the disease during the whole year. Nevertheless, the largest number of cases occur between May and September. Although hydrophia is known to have existed from the earliest ages a certain cure has never yet been found for it. The treatment is very similar now to that pursued even before the days of Galen. The only advance we may be said to have made is in the abolition of murder, for we no longer smother hydrophobic parients. Of this berbarous practice no trace is to be discovered before the sixteenth century, and next to the burning of wirenes it aff rds the strongest chapter in the history of unsurherized public orime. In former days the inhaling of the breath of the sufferer from hydrophopia was thought to be dangerous, as also the bite of the victim, and, no cure being possible, it was considered a matter of public safety to put him to death. which was done in numerous cases by smothering him between feather beds. In the Augustan age they ducked but did not drown them. Celsus, who lived about two bundred and thirty years before Christ, gave a very distinct account and trea ment of bydrophobis, the substance of which war: The only koown remedy for the dread of and desire for water which so torment the suff rer is "to throw him unaware into a pond before he sees the water, where, if he caunot swim he will swallow a sufficency of water white he sinks and rises by his . w. exer ions; but if he swime. he same end is to be attained by the assistant dipping him noder we er from am - to time." and less he should suffer from the flecis of is cold plung, he is to be given a bath of warm

The dread of water he conceives to arise from montal aberration, which he calls mosired jad. ment. Outum was freely used by the ancients but to ff countly, and even arsent produced no chick apon the course of the disease Dogs uving upon islands are less liable to hydrophobia than those on the mainland. This is owing to their isolation, which by ini ing the admixture of breeds, p events d generation. Some forty years ago alm ist all the dogs in St. Dimingo were infected from the bites of rabid animals brought from the United States. In Jamaica the dogs kept for the destruction of rate upon sugar cetates are frequently seized with madness without any discoverable o-use. Simple heat will not create the diseast, as it is not more common is tropical recions than in temperate. Some have asserted that m n of the Arab race are exempt from its ravages, but

Arabian physicians treat of the disease. Hy-Irophobia is very rare in Saeden. There is no mention made of the disease in the sacred volume. which circumstance is bes explained by the fact that even down to the present day o-nine madoess is unknown in Syria and

Egypt. In 1793 a case was recorded or hydrophobia resulting from the bite of an insect. The lion and the tiger were formerly believed to be expable of producing the same result. The camel is alluded to by Aristotle, and the loopard, the bear, the horse, the donkey and the gamecock are mentioned by Aureian as animals propagating the disease. The fox and wolf of the kindred for the dog, and hese, with the latter and domestic car are all the snimels which appear upon reliable testimony to have produced a genuine rabid hydrophobia by their bite. Hanger, putrid food, configement, viclent treatment, great atmosoberio beat or oad, obecked perspiration, the growth of a peculiar worm under the tongue. ntestinal worm , epidemic con axion, want of water and self-generated contagion, have all been assigned as causes of hydrophobia among anima's. With respect to hunger, it is known that its pange produce a high degree of fury in the woll; but this is I ssened when his famine is allayed. It is not by drophobia, and it does no a pear that the dog, even when dying of hunger, ex ib to the same fury. Moreover by far the greater number of o.ses occur in dogs hat are highly fed and pampered. Putrid food seems an ailment as natural to the dog as to the vulture or maggot. The great majority of dogs kept in keepels are fed upon nothing else, and hydrophobia is not frequent among these; while pet lap dove and favorite cats. whose taste has been rendered too nice by indulgeco : to eat pu rid meat, frequently become mad and communicate by their bire by. drophobia to men and rabies to other animals. Great abandance of filth in the streets, or carrion, by congregating a number of dogs from all quarters must greatly tend to disseminate the malady. Hence it will be seen that, not only does the fit h of the streets subj c; the commu ony to the probability of pessuence during the -ummer months, but exposes it to a deager qualty dissetrous in i's effects-that of an incrass of bydrophobia in this beyond soy pre-
